Just a speed run today so not the best solution but it will have to do. Border and radial gradient. Final character count: 155. I just went with my gut and did some gradients. It was quick and easy. Final character count: 145. I went with a quicker solution today rather than a good one. Margin collapse or the lack thereof tripped me up for a minute but I got it ... I did box shadows and not that well. It was a long road but got there in the end even with the odd values. Final character count: 145 ... I went for gradients and that was a mistake. Didn't even get to 100% and spent waaaaay too long messing with this flawed solution. This is an interesting one. I ended up using outline and border to get this done and then realized corner shape might work well ... This one is just a combination of shapes and gradients. Nothing out of the ordinary. This one got me, I thought I was going to create two wedges out of linear gradients but I'm glad I saw another solution half wayÂ ... Just a border and background for this one with the body rotated. Final character count: 111. I went with stacked box shadows to make this. Probably not the best idea but I got there eventually. Final character count: 135. I started this intent on using a conic gradient and then abandoned it for a radial gradient. I like the solution though. I was hoping the dimensions would line up for the stripes on the balls to touch each other but it did not seem to. I did an elaborateÂ ... This one has bits from yesterdays challenge. I tried to resolve it an a slightly different way from yesterday. Got the W at the end.
